

In the story Animal Farm the character, Farmer Jones, is like Saddam Hussein. Just like how Hussein lost power after his citizens were angry with how he was treating them and exiled him, Farmer Jones was also exiled by the animals on the farm. This was because he was constantly drunk and cruel to all the animals. “Jones ties a brick around their neck and drowns them”(Orwell 30). All of this cruelty is what sparked the rebellion against these rulers. They didn’t realize the only reason they had power was because of their citizens, and that the citizens could just as easily take their power away with a rebellion.
